Govarnment Statistics Proving the Increasing Pupulsrity of Divorcement. . WASHINGTON, Fsb. 21.-Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of Labor, has submitted to Congrass his special report on the statistics of the laws relating to marrlaga and divores in the United States from 1867 to 1986 inclasive. The statistics of marriags in this report cover only six-ty six per cant. of all the countles in the country. The reason of this incompisteeass is that the countles not reported have ac record of marriages. The statistics relating to divorce, howavsr, are very com-plate, and cover over niaety-six par cant. of all the counties in the country, and more than alnety-aight per cent. of the population. The whols number of divorces granted in the United States is given by years as follows: In dered to prepare for lynching. The ropes 1867, 9,937; 1868, 10 150: 1869, 10,939; 1870, were in sight, when "Cattle Keie" inter-10,962; 1871, 11,686; 1872, 12,89); 1873, 13,156; 1874, 13,989; 1875, 14,212; 1876, 14,850; 1877, 15,687; 1878, 16,089; 1879, 17,083; 1880, 19,-663; 1881, 29,762; 1882, 25,112; 1883, 23,198; 1884, 22,991; 1883, 23,472; 1886, 25 535. Totai for the twenty years, 328,716. The re-port shows that in but five States and the District of Colembia can the number of merriages be obtained with practical completensss. The States ara Connecticut, Massachusetts, Obio, Ithods Island and Vermoat The number of marrisges cels-brated in each during the tweaty years covered by the report, so far as returned, is: Connecticut, 96,737; District of Colum-544,562; Ithods Island, 49,593; Vernaont, fairly perfect in savsral other States, although but twenty-two States have State registration of marrisges. During the last five-year period of the iwenty years the States of Coancetleut, Maine and Vermont are the only ches showing a decrease yesra covered by the report 216,735 or 65 per cent. of the whole, warn granted to wives, and HI,483 were granted

Before the house he halted, lenped to the ground and proceeded to open the gate. He lifted his hut to Mr. Vandihle, who yet sat on the broad porch, just adding a new charge to his bonest old pipe.

even without an invitation.

Sam, the colored stable-boy, was sent to look after the Captain's horses, while the Captain himself occupied a chair beside the venerable praprietor of Lone Hollow.

For an hour the two conversed, then Cap-tain Starbright went in to look for Grace Penroy. He found her ln a cozy room in one huge est eroughing near, purring softly. It was a pleasant home seene, and the gallsnt Captain paused and gazed through the halfopen door with a queer smile on his dark

Graco Penroy presented a picture of the most exquisite leveliness just then. The contear of her face was almost perfect, and a delicate rose that in the smooth, soft cheek, not too pronounced, while a mass of golden hair fell away in ahundant waves to her shoulders. Evidently she was not just now expecting company, and the step la the corridor without caused her to look up

Tall, straight as an nrrow, with a dark face, heavy mustache, black eyes and insinuating smile, he was what most women would denominate hundsome. He drossed richly, sporting a diamond stud, the most immaculate lineu, and the latest style of tie. Fascianting he certainly was. Few of the gentier sex could resist his advances. Up to the present time, however, Grace Up to the present time, however, Grace Penroy might be counted among the few. It might be that the bonest face of a

Then Captain Starbright walked staikingiy from the room. In another and larger apartment he found the mother of Grace, apartment he found the motion of Grace, who received the moco or less distinguished Captain with a smile of welcome.

Mrs. Penroy was a faded woman of forty. Meek as a child, with but little seeming energy left over after the conclusion of her married life. She could not oven be called an interesting widow. Nevertheless Cap-tala Starbright imagined she might prove interesting before the drama he had innugurated was at an end.

"Then I know what can be done."

The Captain came to his feet and strode twice across the rich carpet in front of the iady, his white bands elenched, his eyes glittering. Then he paused in front of her with a set, wicked look on his face.

"Mrs. Penroy, I know what can be done, what will be done. I know where the real heiress to Morgan Vandible's fortune is, wing of the old house, a hit of work in her and I will turn there for the profit I expected to reap from you and this terribly particular daughter of yours."

Ho glared at her furiously for a moment, then turned on his heel as if to depart.

She called his name huskily. He paused and faced her with a frown. "Are you coming to your seuses at last, woman?" "Captain Starbright, you did not mean what you said just now! The heiress can not possibly be alive."

"I did mean lt, Mrs. Penroy," he declared, emphatically. "Where is she! Who is sho!"

"I beg of you to be careful, Captain. All depends on him, you know. Ho is very changeable. To-morrow he may be ready to urge Grace to an acceptance of your suit. There's oc telling twenty-four hours in advance what futher will do or say. As he grows eider he is more given to such freaks."

"It seems so."

"It seems so." There was a trouble deep down in the heart of Captain Clinton Starbright that Mrs. Penroy did not see, and it all came from the realizing sonse that Lura Joyce was coming to Lone Hollaw to live. Why should the exquisite Captain care for the presence of a puny girl, even if he did not like herl

There was good cause for his coming. He would have given his good right hand to keep Lura Joyco away from Lone Hollow. Such a sacrifice would not avail, however, and Captain Starbright was miserable.

And this was true. At the end of the hall, near the front door, a door opened into a small reception room on the right.

Captain Starbright stood here now, in the shadows, debating what course to pur-sue, vexed and angry, when the side door opened suddeuly and a low voice said: "Captain Starbright, here is your hat. It is a pity you have been detained!

He turned, thrilled hy the voice, and looked into the laughing eyes of his enemy,

Theco was a square sat to the lawer jaw not compatible with feminica heanty. Her complexion would have been exquisite hu for freekies. The square nose, rather ufter the styledenominated ping showed aggressiveness, as did the jaw and month. The forebead, low and broad, was surmounted hy short, eriop, defiant red curis that danced and fluttered with every turn of her head. Her farm was slender to attenuation, and withal Lura Joyca was not calcu-inted at first sight to win the admiring gaze of the human male hiped.

There was something in her face and movements, however, that demanded a second look, and when this was given, a third would follow, and then n more pleasing as-pect appeared, ending at last in fascination. Captain Starbright had felt this last sen stion more than once, and it was stealing over him now in spite of the fact that his hitter enemy in the coutest that was to come. Ho threw off the magnetism with
